Art 2. Orders of Nurses to Patients - Every patient committed to the care of a nurse should be treated with attention, cheerfulness and gentleness. Reasonable indulgence should be exposed to mental imbecility and the caprices of the sick.

Secrecy and confidential intercourse to which nurses are admitted should be used with discretion, and with the most scrupulous regard to fidelity and honor. The obliga-pall of professional secrecy to opinion when the question of sending such a nurse to a patient is involved.

Every member of the Alumni Assoc. should feel it her duty to further the interests of the society, not only by attendance at the regular meetings, and by the payment of fees, but also by giving her hearty support to the work proposed by it, and by interesting the public in such work in all legitimate ways.

Art 6. Engagements - Engagements, whether written or verbal, should be regarded as legal contracts, only to be broken by the nurse when entirely unavoidable, or for the maintenance of self-respect. Nor should a nurse leave a case when once entered upon, except for the same reason. When a nurse is called to a case, because the nurse engaged is absent from any cause, or to assist another nurse, she ought, when her services are no longer required, to assign the patient to the next nurse, that it may not be necessary to criticize work already done. When two or more graduates come as a nursing home student, each nurse should take her share of the nursing hours, and the full responsibility of the nursing when on duty.

Part 1 Duties to the Public - As a trained nurse she should be vigilant in all matters pertaining to hygiene and sanitation. When distress prevails, she should do all in her power toward the alleviation of suffering.
